Shogun Method is all about using Mind Control on women – planting thoughts in their minds, conditioning their emotions, and influencing their behavior.

Self Mind Control, or SMC, is exactly what the name implies – you use Mind Control on yourself. You plant thoughts in your own mind, condition your own emotions, and influence your own behavior.

SMC is the single most important piece of self-improvement you can undertake, and you're about to see why.

Why Is Self Mind Control Important?

If you've not been getting the results with women that you want no matter what you do to improve yourself, then here's a likely reason why:

You've been failing to hold frame.

What's "frame?"

Your frame is your unique worldview – your mission in life, your beliefs, and your values. In Shogun Method, you've been taught to cultivate a particular frame:

- That you're a strong, dominant, purpose-driven man
- That in an interaction with a woman, you're the prize, and she's the pursuer
- That you never hold any woman in higher regard than you hold yourself
- That you lead a life of abundance – abundance with women, abundance with wealth generation options, abundance of knowledge
- That in the pursuit of your goals in love and life, you follow your own rules
- That you're not a slave to your emotions – rather, your emotions serve you
- Etc.

“Holding frame” means sticking to your frame, even when you’re under immense pressure to conform to a different frame... in most cases, the frame of the woman you’re interacting with.

Many times, women will test the strength of your frame. They’ll manipulate the interaction to send the message across: That you’ll only get your desired outcome with her if and only if you leave your frame and enter hers.

And too many men have such weak frames that they can change their worldviews, their values, and their beliefs anytime they need to conform to a woman’s expectations, to please and appease her.

These poor men don’t know that it’s all a trick – that when a woman realizes they have weak frames, she instantly loses attraction for them, and the game is instantly over.

Signs Of A Weak Frame

Here are a few tell-tale signs your frame is weak and you easily fail to hold it:

- You care about what other people think of you
- You feel the need for others to agree with you

- You feel the need for others to like you
- You feel the need to change people's opinions about you (especially when the opinions are negative)
- You're easily offended or insulted by things you hear or read (about you or others)
- You feel the need to make others "understand you"
- When people disagree with you, you feel the need to argue with them and prove them wrong

By now, you should already know that women will test your frame. They know that a man always puts his best foot forward when meeting a new woman, so they test you to see if you're really as manly as you show yourself to be.

And so they throw challenges and insults your way:

- "Buy me a drink?"
- "You're probably a loser."
- "Wow, you're so fat!"
- "That's the dumbest thing I've ever heard."

- “You’re probably a player who’s just after sex.”

You know these challenges as “shit tests,” and if you have a hard time passing them, it’s because you have weak frame.

Guys fail shit tests because they let their emotions overrun their rational mind. And that is a recipe for continued failure with women.

Putting this in the context of Shogun Method, having a weak frame means that you’ll find problems escalating onto the Attraction stage¹ with you. Instead, you’ll get stuck in the Rapport stage, and spending too much time in Rapport will get you Friend-Zoned.

Outcome Independence (OI)

The key to developing a stronger frame therefore is to NOT let your emotions overrun your rational mind at any time.

In layman’s terms - having a stronger frame means NOT giving a shit about what other people think.

¹ “A” stage in the IRAE Model. See the core Shogun Method program for details

Having a stronger frame means NOT pinning your hopes on any one woman, or any one interaction, or any one outcome to make you happy.

This state of “not giving a shit” has a proper name in Shogun Method. It’s called Outcome Independence.

Outcome Independence (OI) is one of the pillars of holding frame. Without it, you can’t hold frame, and as a result, your success with women will always be limited.

The challenge: OI is not easy to develop. Few men ever achieve complete Outcome Independence, and even the most experienced Shoguns spend time honing their sense of OI even after they’re already successful with women.

And you know what? You should do the same, too. And that’s where Self Mind Control (SMC) comes in.

This guide will show you how to use SMC as a way to achieve Outcome Independence and frame mastery. So, instead of spending years or decades developing OI, you’ll only need weeks or even days – as long as you follow what you read here in this guide closely.

Let’s now start with the basics.

Self Mind Control 101

Self Mind Control is similar to the practices of meditation and prayer, except for a keen focus on improving your attractiveness² to women.

It's quite possible to use standard meditation practices to improve your success rate with women. But it has a drawback – much of the information out there about meditation is random, confusing, and oftentimes conflicting.

That's why Self Mind Control is the way to go. It has a clear goal, a proven framework, and a remarkably easy-to-follow methodology that can be followed even by Shogun Method beginners.

Here's how Self Mind Control will help you get better with women:

1. First, you'll gain a better, deeper sense of yourself
2. With a deeper sense of self, you'll achieve Outcome Independence (OI)

² Specifically, your Social Value (SV). See Module 4 of Black Book Volume Three

3. With OI, you'll be able to hold frame even against the toughest tests and challenges from women
4. When you can pass women's tests and challenges easily, you'll start having better relationships with more women
5. Your success with women will lead to success in other areas of your life³

Let's start with the very first step of all: Gaining a better, deeper sense of yourself.

Who are you? Are you your thoughts? Are you your goals? Are you your outcomes and results? Are you your beliefs and values?

Or, are you something else entirely?

Let's find out.

Step #1: Knowing Yourself

First of all, the answer is “no” to all of the above.

You're not your thoughts, or your goals, or your outcomes, or

³ Known as the Spillover Effect in Shogun Method lexicon your beliefs.

Instead, you're what's experiencing all of the above.

1. You're what's experiencing your thoughts and feelings
2. You're what's setting your goals in life
3. You're what's achieving your outcomes and results
4. You're what's setting and adhering to your beliefs and values

One of the best analogies about the self that I've ever come across was that to an Internet browser.

Have you ever spent so much mindless time on the Internet that you ended up with so many open tabs – some news blog, a bunch of them on some clickbait articles, three of them on Facebook, maybe some porn, and there's some music playing but you have no idea where it's coming from?

Your self is like that browser, and your thoughts, identities, activities, beliefs, goals, etc. are those browser tabs. It's easy to lose yourself in the chaos, and when you lose yourself, you're much less productive, much less effective, much less successful, and much less happy.

But here's the thing. When you close all tabs and go back to your homepage, the browser can be anything you need it to be.

Likewise, when you “close all tabs” in your mind, you too can be anything you need to be.

That's how your mind works. That's how you find your sense of self. That's how you prime yourself to focus on just one thing.

The more regularly “close all tabs” in your mind, the better and deeper your sense of self will be. And a clear mind is crucial for the second step of Self Mind Control: To focus.

Step #2: Directing The Mind

Stoic philosopher Marcus Aurelius wrote much about what he called “The Directing Mind.”

Today, we know he was talking about our rational minds – the conscious parts of our minds where we make our decisions.

Other common terms for the Directing Mind include “mindfulness” and “free will.”

They all mean the same thing: Not being a slave to your emotions.

Using your Directing Mind means you don't act like an animal:

- If you feel an itch, you have the freedom and mental capacity to not scratch it
- If you feel hungry, you have the freedom and mental capacity to not drop what you're doing and find something to eat
- If you feel horny, you have the freedom and mental capacity to not look at porn, or masturbate, or fuck the first woman you come across

Instead, you direct your mind to a single focus: The task in front of you.

When it comes to moving a woman through the IRAE model, that task might be:

1. To open the interaction with your target, perhaps with an Intrigue Ping
2. To build Rapport with her, perhaps with Mirroring techniques

3. To escalate onto Attraction with her, perhaps with Implanted Commands
4. To Enslave her and make her yours forever, perhaps with the Black Rose technique

If you'll notice, moving through the IRAE Model absolutely requires a Directing Mind. You must go through each Stage in sequence, one Stage at a time, without skipping any one Stage.

If you keep judging yourself, or looking for a particular reaction from your target, or thinking about the next step – you'll mess up.

Success requires you focus on just one Stage, one task at a time. Success, therefore, requires the ability to switch on your Directing Mind at will.

If that sounds daunting, it shouldn't. You've switched on your Directing Mind countless times in the past, albeit by accident:

- You zoned out when watching a movie or TV show
- You lost yourself in a good book
- You got so engrossed in a conversation that you lost track of time

DEREK RAKE

- You daydreamed in a meeting and didn't hear your boss call your name
- Etc.

When you can switch on your Directing Mind at will, then you'll start experiencing life ten times more deeply. You'll be happier, stronger, and more in control.

You'll enjoy women more. You'll have more rewarding interactions with them. And you can focus on doing just one thing at a time, instead of worrying about a million things all at once.

Step #3: Self-Hypnosis

Now we get to self-hypnosis, which is the active process of “working out” your Directing Mind and making it stronger over time.

Self-hypnosis is similar to standard meditation, but with critical differences. For instance, standard meditation is often used as a blanket approach – an attempt at self-improvement that targets all areas of life at the same time.

Self-hypnosis (in the context of Shogun Method) takes a more laser-focused approach: To drastically improve your love life first and then letting that improvement spill over to other areas of your life afterward.

There are many other differences, as you'll see as we go into the details of self-hypnosis.

Frequency of self-hypnosis. Most meditation gurus advise meditating at least once a day. In my experience (and in the experience of many of your fellow Shoguns), one session of self-hypnosis a day is never enough.

Most practitioners find out that the first self-hypnosis session is often largely a failure:

- Too many thoughts running at the same time
- Too difficult to “close all tabs” and start with a clean slate
- It takes a tremendous amount of energy to stop what you're doing, sit down, and meditate
- It takes too much time to clear one's mind
- External distractions and disturbances

That's why I suggest you do it at least twice a day – once in the morning as you start the day, and once in the evening as you wind down.

1. Your morning session is meant to “prep” you for the day, “closing all tabs” running in your mind as you get out of bed and getting your priorities in order.
2. Your evening session is meant to “consolidate” your day – running through your achievements and completed tasks, then “closing all tabs” to get ready for bed.

Length of self-hypnosis. Most meditation gurus suggest meditating for at least ten minutes per session. Again, that’s not enough for Shogun Method practitioners, especially for beginners.

The reason is simple: The first ten minutes (or more) of a self-hypnosis session can be a struggle. The standard advice is to “delete” any thought outside the point of focus of a meditation session, but that can be extremely difficult and lead to failure.

What’s worse, failing a meditation session can be discouraging to a practitioner, who will then choose to discontinue his pursuit of building a stronger frame. That’s a tremendous waste.

So, I suggest you allocate at least 15-20 minutes for each self-hypnosis session, allowing your thoughts to float in your mind for the first few minutes. It’s easier to “delete” a thought once you’ve given it some time to “say its piece” in your mind.

Location. The ideal location is one where you can have absolutely zero distractions for fifteen to twenty minutes. It could be a closed room with the hum of an air conditioner. Or it could be on a chair or sofa.

Find a location that works for you.

Position for self-hypnosis. No, you don't need to squat in the lotus position unless you're fairly comfortable in it and if it helps you focus. You can be seated or lounging, or even lying down (although that just makes me fall asleep). Some like undergoing their self-hypnosis while standing up.

Whichever position you prefer, make sure it's a position where it's easy for you to breathe. Here's why:

Breathing. Close your eyes and breathe deeply – inhaling through the nose, then exhaling through the mouth. We're talking about deep breaths that expand your torso, loud enough for you to hear it.

You'll be breathing deeply throughout your fifteen-minute session. As you breathe, visualize breathing out all the bad stuff in your life: Physical (dirt, toxins, etc.), mental (stress, uncertainty, etc.), and spiritual (guilt, shame, etc.). This practice alone will greatly help you “let go” of random thoughts, relax, and totally

- If you use an affirmation, become the affirmation⁴

Achieving this will take time, patience, and diligence in self-hypnosis. It's like training a muscle – the first few times are always hellish, but push through and you'll enjoy a lifetime of rewards.

Banishing Random Thoughts. The first few times you'll try self-hypnosis, you'll be beset by random thoughts. Your mind may go wild with thoughts like:

- “Am I doing this self-hypnosis thing right?”
- “How do Derek and the other Shoguns do it?”
- “I have absolutely no idea what the fuck I'm doing.”
- “Am I just kidding myself? Can I really do this?”

When these thoughts get through, don't beat yourself up over them. Simply notice them, catch them, and banish them. If letting them “say their piece” makes banishing them easier, do so.

Other times, you'll daydream, and you'll only catch yourself several minutes into your train of thought: “This sure reminds me of

Many Shogun Method practitioners use the Affirmations Track inside the Alpha Wave Activator program to do this successfully that girl I banged ten years ago. She was really in love with me – how I wish I didn't fuck up my chances with her by... Oh right. Self-hypnosis. Breathe. Focus."

This is also normal, so you should also not kick yourself for slipping like that. Simply get rid of the thought and re-establish your focus.

Some Shoguns find it more effective to banish random thoughts in other ways, such as:

- By asking the thought nicely to go away and come back later
- By using the Alpha Male Activator program to put them on track
- By using “mental jiu-jitsu” and transmuting the thought into something that helps them focus
- By being rude and telling the thought to fuck off and never come back

For many, the easiest way to tame your mind is to fill it up with affirmations and subliminal messaging (i.e with the Alpha Male Activator affirmation track). Find out what method works best for you and stick to it.

Following Through With Self Mind Control

As the weeks and months roll by, you may notice some peculiar sensations accompanying your self-hypnosis sessions:

- You feel a buzz like you're tipsy
- You feel some tension in your head
- You see psychedelic colors behind your closed eyelids
- You're hyper-aware of everything that's going on around you
- You catch yourself thinking unproductive thoughts and you stop them immediately

More tellingly, your interactions with women are getting better as you start holding rock-solid frame:

1. You're more facetious and daring
2. You have zero concern about being politically-correct

3. You no longer feel any need to make women understand you, agree with you, or think the way you do
4. You're unapologetically you
5. When women challenge or test you, you never get offended anymore. Instead, you can be nonsensical, sarcastic, silly, or amused – but you never get emotionally affected ever again

But best of all, you achieve true Outcome Independence. You're no longer emotionally attached to any individual outcome with any individual woman. But at the same time, you know that if you keep meeting women, you'll eventually meet the ones who will absolutely love giving you your desired outcomes.

Ironically, you'll learn that not caring about your results actually brings better results with women. You hold frame no matter what, and it makes women realize you're stronger and more dominant than most of the men they've ever met in their lives.

And almost unconsciously, you'll bring your strong frame onto other areas of your life. You'll make better, bolder decisions and get better results – and since you're unapologetically you, you enjoy everything more.

The key to all this? Self Mind Control. Make it central to your existence, and it's going to completely change your life for the better, just as it has for me and thousands of your fellow Shoguns ❖
